

WILLS VERSUS TRUSTS: Which One is Right For You?

Wills and trusts are both estate-planning tools that can help ensure your assets are protected and bequeathed to your heirs. However, the transfer process becomes more involved when passing wealth to a subsequent generation.

A will is a written document expressing a deceased person's wishes, from naming guardians of minor children to distributing assets upon death. Trusts are active the day you create them, and a grantor may list the distribution of assets before their death, unlike a will. Unlike a trust, a will must go through probate and can also be contested.

Will

WILL

- It's a legally enforceable document stating how you want your affairs handled and your assets distributed after you die
- Can include a directive of how you want your funeral or memorial managed
- Your estate becomes part of the public record, and anything left by a will must go through probate court
- Retirement accounts and life insurance policies that pass straight to beneficiaries don't go through the probate process
- If you have minor-aged children at home, it's important to have a will that appoints guardianship of your children
- A will allows you to disinherit a child or spouse under certain circumstances
- If you die without a will, a condition called intestate is enacted, and courts follow a set formula for how to divide your assets, which could result in actions that negatively impact a surviving spouse or child
- If your estate is worth less than $11.7 million, there's no tax return required, and you won't be charged an estate tax

Trust

REVOCABLE LIVING TRUST

- It's called a living trust because it's created and maintained while the owner/trustor is alive and is revocable because it may be changed during the life of the trustor
- It holds a fiduciary relationship in which you give another party authority to handle your assets for the benefit of a third party
- There aren't court or attorney fees after the trust is established
- Your property can pass immediately and directly to your named beneficiaries, skipping the probate process
- The contents of the trust can rarely be challenged in court, and the contents of the trust are held private
- One doesn't usually trump another, but if any issue arises, a living trust will most likely override a will
- To be valid, a trust must identify the following: the trustor, the trustee, the successor trustee, and the trust beneficiaries
- When set up properly, trusts can reduce how much of an estate is taxed at the 40% rate

Nearly everyone should have a will, but not everyone needs a trust.

For more clarification and to properly set up your estate so that your intentions are handled as you wish, contact our office toll-free at: 866-748-7721

Phone: 936-559-1123

Email: jarrod@pineywoodsfinancial.com

www.pineywoodsfinancial.com

303 Creekbend Blvd. Suite B | Nacogdoches, TX 75965

PINEYWOODS
FINANCIAL

Investment advisory and financial planning services are offered through Alphastar Capital Management, LLC; a SEC registered investment advisor. SEC registration does not constitute an endorsement of the firm by the Commission nor does it indicate that the adviser or investment adviser representative has attained a particular level of skill or ability. Additional information about Alphastar Capital Management, LLC is also available on the SEC's website at adviserinfo.sec.gov.

The content within this document is for educational purposes only and does not represent legal, tax or investment advice. Customers should speak with their legal or tax advisor regarding their own unique situation. Insurance company products and their features, benefits and/or guarantees, are backed by the claims paying ability of the issuing insurance company.

<https://www.investopedia.com/articles/personal-finance/051315/will-vs-trust-difference-between-two.asp>